ITS NEWS

ITS Vietnam attended the recent ITB Asia Travel Symposium where leaders in the travel industry shared their insights to travel in the era of Covid.

Despite the drop off in tourism due to the pandemic, it was pleasing to note some positive messages being shared, and ones ITS has taken on board so that it is "Covid ready" for when borders are open. We thought you might like to know:

Tripadvisor shared some statistics taken from a recent summary

41% of consumers report they've already spent time researching holiday travel for the up coming holiday season.

ITS Vietnam offers Risk Free booking and Cancellations options so travellers can book and travel with confidence knowing they have flexibility to change if needed.

Mu Cang Chai – Those green hillsides get you every time!

If you have been lured to Vietnam through photos depicting circled fields of towering rice terraces, it is mostly likely you are looking at the region Mu Cang Chai, totalling an area of about 2,200 hectares and home to mostly the Thai, H'Mong and Red Dzao hill tribes.
Carved out of the hillside 500 acres were designated as national heritage sites by Vietnam's Ministry of Culture, Sports and Tourism in 2007.
It's no surprise that the area attracts lots of media attention due to its amazing beauty.
Adventure travellers, trekkers and travel photographers are keen to explore the region and mix with the local tribes for a truly authentic experience.

It may interest you to know that the hill tribes did not create this place of profound beauty for the tourist, it was basically created to survive.

Rice thrives in water-logged conditions, making it ideal for the flooded Mekong Delta at the country's southern tip. To grow rice in vertical conditions, hill tribes created a terraced system to control the downward flow of water. Using ingenuity, resourcefulness and sheer grunt work, fertile fields of sustenance and breathtaking beauty were born — and still flourish today. The fields are agricultural feats of precision.
If you would like ITS Vietnam to take you there we have been visiting this region for over 20 years and have witnessed its development and can bring to you a very immersive experience you will never forget.
